Chapter 1: My Story

Before we get into the how of trading, I'd like to tell you a little bit about my why. We all have a reason why we behave the way we do...why we think the way we do...and you'll see that the ability to be forward-thinking about money has always been a key part of me. I remember, growing up, my parents often fighting about money. It didn't seem to matter how much my dad worked, we just never quite had enough to keep everyone satisfied. Even as a child, I could see that money was what kept my father away from our home, and what caused him stress while he was there. I knew at a young age that no matter what I did when I grew up, I didn't want to have that stress for myself for my future family.

I'm grown now and have three beautiful children and a wonderful wife. In my working adult life I used to be an aerospace engineer... that is until I was laid off both 2008 and 2009. It was difficult because my wife and I, being newly married, were naturally budget minded and interested in financial freedom. We knew that financial freedom, and all that lifestyle has to offer, was the right thing to strive for. The time freedom, the ability to be there for my wife and eventually our children, was also a big goal to work toward. I was beginning with the end in mind, as they say, and wanted to set myself up to be successful in all areas of life. It was just how to get there that was plaguing me in my early years. Being able to stay at home and spend time with my family was really high on the list of things that I worked toward.

Our first big business venture as a married couple was owning a donut shop. That shop was successful, but it was difficult to scale that success because of all the overhead. We were wonderful at selling donuts, but the more customers purchased our donuts, the more overhead we incurred. The margins, fees, and taxes didn't make for good math at the end of the day, and at the beginning of that particular journey, we were expecting our first child. Both of us were wiped out, and we eventually gave up the business and moved on.

We lived with my wife's parents for a while and I felt generally defeated during a lot of that time. I knew how to make money, but really needed that time to reset in order to find my path. During this time spent at my in-law's house, I took a regular job just to have something going, and that wore me out pretty quickly. The job was shift work, so me coming home in the middle of the night wore on our relationship as well. I was, however, able to think a lot during this time. I also drove for Uber and Lyft, and though it often felt like a grey cloud was hanging over me, it gave me a lot of time to think and to research.

One night, around midnight on an extremely cold night.... I was parked as an Uber and Lyft driver, waiting in the cold for the next ride to come up. I wasn't running the heater, deciding instead to sit there in the cold. What better way to save fuel than to sit and wait without the heater running, right? The budget was always on my mind, including the fuel budget, so it was a natural thought process to just sit and wait as efficiently as possible between rides. While I was sitting there, I pulled out my phone and started searching the internet for information about money. This had to be something I could learn...a skill set I just hadn't acquired yet...that was keeping me from succeeding with money. In that moment, I discovered what money really is.

That was a big turning point for me. After stumbling across Mike Maloney, who wrote The Hidden Secrets of Money, he touched on the history of money itself. Our relationship with money, the history of it from its inception to what it is today, was a revelation to me that night.

My perception of what purpose money was to serve in my life completely changed. The more I learned about inflation, and how money is actually created (out of thin air!), the more it started to leave a bad taste in my mouth. After college, for example, I emerged with twenty thousand dollars in student loan debt. You, I'm sure, have a story that is not much different. Between starting at this deficit and learning that every subscription and every payment I'd racked up was just a way to keep myself within the confines of a normal job, I knew I had to start thinking about things differently. Even fresh out of college, you're just working your fancy new job in order to pay off your school loans and your immediate payments such as your house and your car. It's really difficult to come out of that, especially in a timely manner.

That night in the car, I remember looking at crypto currency on the internet. Bitcoin at that time was only worth a few dollars. By the time it was valued at one hundred and fifty dollars, I had ten thousand dollars in my pocket that I'd made from ecommerce. Again, I'd made all of this money, but just as with any physical product that you sell, the profits and margins are eaten into with marketing and overhead. Even at this price point of one hundred and fifty dollars, I still passed up my chance to invest in Bitcoin. It wasn't until it was over a thousand dollars that I started paying attention to it again.

By this time, I was able to do very well for myself trading crypto and investing in ICOs (initial coin offerings). We paid off all our debts and were completely debt free. There was still the truth, though, that the minute I stopped trading I would stop making money. That's where the bots come in. Even during college, I was always fascinated by the thought of bots being able to perform things for you so that you could make money even when you're asleep or away from the computer. I didn't really know how to code much at the time, so I purchased a bot that someone else had made and then auto tuned it. It certainly didn't run on its own with no babysitting; the market is always changing, so the bot always needed adjusting and updating.

I thought to myself that trading crypto had helped my family get debt free and provided more than enough. What if I could help bring other parents home so they could be there for their children? What if I could put everything I've learned into a trade bot so that anyone can use the same strategies without any experience? That's when Trade Bot Secrets as an idea began. So I ventured out to create my own bot that would be a fully automated bot, no constant babysitting required. Trade Bot Secrets has its losses, of course, that come up from time to time...but those are absorbed easily within the daily wins of the bot.

Chapter 2: The Mindset is Key

One of the most important things to do in this business is to find a great mentor and follow their lead, because when one of us wins...we all win. By coming together with other like minded individuals, you'll learn the ins and outs of the industry, as well as gain encouragement when you are unsure. It won't take long for you to see real progress, even with small investments of your time and money. If you've made it this far without giving someone a large chunk of your money in hopes that they'll make you rich quickly, great job! This process isn't a race, and there is not just one winner. I'll show you how to create wins for yourself both large and small, and you can celebrate them with the other members of the group. When we aren't afraid of each other's success and are capable of lifting each other up, there is plenty of room for all of us at the table. In order to succeed, you'll only need a few things, starting with a decent pain tolerance!

Whatever you think you know about trading at this point, even if you're not new to the process, just go ahead and forget about it. Trading doesn't have to be as stressful as some people make it look, and in fact it can be even more profitable when it's completely stress free. Having the ability to sit down at your desk several days a week and take a deep breath before you begin is going to serve you well. It's important to remember that you're the tortoise in this story, and not the hare. Better yet...be a wolf. A wolf needs to eat. He doesn't go crazy and try to trap a million animals in hopes that he'll be set for life. He goes out every single week, with the help of his highly effective pack, and brings home the meat! The group will be your pack, and I will help you succeed. It is unnecessary to try and win the entire game all at once. When you go into your work day with a strategy in mind, you'll get a lot farther than if you're staring at your computer all day and night, stressing out over every fifty dollar change in status. That's not what this is about.

If you look at the market over the course of the entire year, you won't see much. But if you put that year, the year before it, and the year before that onto a line chart and looked at all of them....you would notice something very interesting. Over the course of each year, the market is very predictable. Much in the same way that a wolf knows what its prey's daily habits and seasonal migrations are. You will know what to expect from the market you'll be working in. Each year in the fall, for example, I take some time off. It's not because I get tired of trading or need a break, it's due to the ebb and flow of the market itself. Each time November rolls around, I know what my trading will look like if I continue, so I take some time off and spend that season with my family.

Enjoying the benefits of successful trading is just one of the perks of this job. I mean, why focus on this and learn about it if you're not also going to reap the time benefits? We are not only trading money, we're also trading some of our incredibly focused time so that we may have more free time in the future. For myself and my family, that looks like more time together in the late fall and early winter, and then I go back to really focusing more on my work in the spring. Spending time with my family is one of the most important things in my life. I still attend church, do grocery runs, play with the kids, and vacation, all while running a successful business.

It's important to have balance, as any happy and successful business owner will tell you. Even by working in between chores and your normal schedule, you can still take profit, even if you're in seemingly difficult positions. As long as you know what to watch out for, and have a good community base to encourage you not to be overly aggressive, you will learn over time, through experience, how to properly use long and short to your best advantage. Finding the trends in the market over the years is one of the most comforting things you can learn in this business, because it reassures you that you don't have to be afraid of it. It will always do what it always does.

Let's imagine for example that you've just had your first great day. You have closed two thousand dollars up using what you've learned, and wake up the next day refreshed and ready to try for the same type of day. After all, if it were possible to make two thousand dollars in one day, why couldn't you make that EVERY day? If that were possible, everyone would be filthy rich every single day. You and I both know that the market is flexible, and many outside factors affect the way it behaves. All we have to do then is learn its patterns of behavior and act accordingly. If you were to have that two thousand dollar day, in this example, and then come back the next day to a huge loss, it would be emotionally devastating. That big loss would drain you of the energy you had the day before. Becoming discouraged the day after a great trading day is one of the first pitfalls we all succumb to, and it's one of the most easily avoidable.

I teach that it is always best to take a full day off after a really successful day. Taking this time to rest and reconnect with the rest of your life will help to keep you from hyperfocusing on the little idiosyncrasies of the market. It's much better to train yourself in the benefits of long term thinking than to sit hunched over your computer, constantly stressing out about every fifty dollar gain or loss. Not only will that type of thinking give you a migraine and make you cranky toward your roommates or family, it won't do you any good in the long run. Remember that it takes a really long time before you're actually losing any money. So that fifty dollars you're tempted to hyperfocus on isn't really even worth mentioning. If you are looking into the trading process to earn enough money to make a good living, you'll be doing that over the course of your working lifetime--not every five minutes of every day. Think about it. If you are working a typical job, you don't really need to be there all day and all night (unless you have a really stressful job!). A typical wage-earning worker will go in at eight or nine in the morning, and work until the early evening.

Now, working for yourself is going to look a lot different than that...but you want it to be more appealing, not less appealing. So when you've had a really tremendous day, think of it as though you'd just closed a huge account for some major client at your last job. You would celebrate that win and prepare for your next project. That's all we're doing, here. When you win big, you take a little break and recharge your batteries. Once that twenty four hour cool off period is over, you can sit right back down in your chair and get to work again. By doing this, you allow yourself to carry that good energy with you into the next day. This will positively affect yourself, your family and friends, and your actions for the rest of the day.

It is widely known that an object in motion will tend to stay in motion. This does not mean, however, that the momentum you gained from a stellar day of trading has to be spent on more trading. Carry that energy into the rest of your life, and keep your life balanced. This will ultimately make you successful in every area, and you will be better suited to steward your earnings in ways that benefit you overall. For example, by following the 80/20 rule that we'll learn about a little later, a two hundred dollar profit on that twenty percent is a whole grocery store run. You're not just creating money. You're creating the ability to do things and live your life with that money.

Wisdom is defined as the quality of having experience, knowledge, and good judgement. You'll be wise to avoid the mistakes I've already made in the past, and to learn from them. This will save you both time and money. Sometimes, even when we know that we should be resting after a great day, that itch still strikes. On those days, go ahead and sit down at the computer and trade, but do it at 1/10 of your normal capacity. This way, you're still feeling that high of trading successfully, but you have very low risk and aren't putting much at stake. Do not be tempted to trade any higher than this, lest you fall victim to fatigue and start making some poor trading choices that you wouldn't have otherwise made. Oftentimes, you will find that the market just isn't moving much after a great day of trading. There is nothing really that you can do about that, other than watch the waves as they pass by. You know the waves will come, you know that it ebbs and flows, because this is the business you are in. Why, therefore, would you try and fight the waves? It's better to jump on your board and learn the ways in which they move. There is a lovely dance in the trading world, and when you learn the steps....when you learn the ebb and flow of how the market moves and shifts....you will be much more successful with every trade. And in this industry, sometimes doing nothing at all after a great day of trading is the most financially successful thing you can possibly do.

Chapter 3: Secret Fundamental Strategies

I'll go over a couple fundamentals quickly that you need to stick to in order to stay in the game for the long term

3.1 Take Forever to Die

"Why won't you die!" You don't want your ability to trade to die. Avoid this by setting yourself up to only use a percentage of your wallet.

The goal of the trading "game" is to stay in the game as long as possible. Try looking at it this way: every day, or trade, you draw out of a bag with 6 green balls and 4 red balls. If you get a green you double your bet, if you get a red you lose what you bet. If you lose it all you're out and you are done, no more opportunity to win. So the odds are in your favor but somehow people can still lose it all. For example, if you start with $100,000 but bet it all every time you draw, even successfully multiplying your money to $1 million, on the next draw you get a red and lose it all, you're done.

In this game, we all want to stay alive for as long as possible. If you only bet 10% of your entire wallet instead of the 100% you would have only lost $10,000, resulting in $90,000 left to use for another draw. If you lose again, you lose $9,000 and you now have $81,000. Notice that you're losing less and less, and it would take a long losing streak to get you down to $1, but you would still be in the game with the opportunity to win. So the key to stay in the game is to not bet it all. You'll have some wins and losses along the way but you'll always stay in the game, giving you an opportunity to gain more. I personally would go no more than 30% of your wallet but that's hard to manage and calculate regularly if you're lazy. So I have a bot calculate that for me.

3.2 Take Advantage of Compound Interest

I didn't really understand compound interest when I first saw it because at 10% a year it would take forever to actually see it do anything useful. In crypto as we trade with leverage, it began to make more sense to me. It's not difficult to achieve 5% in a day, as opposed to getting 10% a year in the stock market using mutual funds. We're allowed to use leverage which makes it even more powerful. Google "daily compound interest calculator" and run some numbers on what you can make on 5% a day, then try 30 days, then 1 year. The numbers are shocking! You'll have to see for yourself. Using compound interest with the simple "Take Forever to Die" strategy, you'll be doing better than most. You'll be the Michael Jordan who lived long enough to miss the most shots and still be the most valuable player.

Chapter 4: Secret Core Strategies

4.1 Use Low Leverage

Many crypto exchanges allow you to use leverage up to 100x. I won't go into the details of it and how it works here, but you can read about it through the exchange's documentation of your choice. I want to say that leverage is a trap for us. This is how the game is played, we're taking money from greedy traders who take more risk than they can handle. You have to watch it like a hawk, and make no mistakes at high leverage. Eventually you'll get hit and lose. Stick to 3x with the bot, if you are watching it, you're allowed to go 5x up to 10x on bitcoin but no higher than 5x on altcoins. If you disobey this rule then you're the kind of person that has to learn it the hard way. I've already lost 4 BTC trying to push higher and higher leverage, even up to 50x. My bots have done it somedays but have given it all back and more. If my bots can't even handle it, I don't think any human can do it consistently. I've been there. I have authority issues, and when someone tells me I can't do something I'm the kind of person that wants to go out and prove them wrong. I get it, it's how we break the sound barrier and build rockets that takes us to the moon. As a father, our priorities change and I'm not here to take those risks anymore. I don't desire to spend time away from my family, wife, kids, etc, to figure out a rocket or break a sound barrier. I want to do it right, make money, and afford the time to spend it with my family.

4.2 The Overall Trend

It's simple but not easy. Just look at the overall trend, it's so simple but we trip ourselves up by over complicating it. The overall trend that we've been noticing is that the market takes a full year to get where it's going, and then it resets. This should bring a measure of comfort when gearing up for the year ahead, because by looking at where the market has been, you have a great understanding of where it's headed. When you are in a bear market, for example, you always want to sell. It's important to not get stuck in a long position in these instances, because you don't want to get caught there. That could easily liquidate you. When you look at the overall time frames, year to year, the market is fairly consistent in the way it ebbs and flows. In November and December, you'll want to begin being cautious and start to pull back with your trading. It's important to be aware of when you should short, and when you should long.

Back in the Day bitcoin trends for a long period of time

As of this writing, bitcoin reached all time high, but how high? My rule of thumb is if I got liquidated at 3 to 5x, then it's probably time to switch to a bear market. If I'm still in the game playing long at 3 to 5x, I'll keep playing long until it ends. I'll share with you a cash flow management strategy in my free trading manual course that we'll talk about later, to hedge against being liquidated, because that day will come and we need to prepare for it.

4.3 Set The Trap Strategy

The analogy of my strategy is to set a trap. Think of yourself as being one wolf in a wolf pack. You're a hunter, and you're going to set a trap for your prey. With enough practice, this will become as natural to you as anything else you do during the day, and you'll be able to easily carry out your duty (and pleasure...because it's certainly fun!) of bringing in your income. What you want to do each day that you work, is to set a trap in order to catch your bait. Your bait, in this case, is simply buying when price goes down. Put several rungs every $100 to $200 from the current price. You'll spread the rungs further if the price is higher and the price action is moving enough to cover it. After setting your long orders and dollar cost averaging in, now it's time to go on and live your life as you normally would once you have the system in play. Go play with the kids, hang out with your spouse or roommates, or go for a run. When you come back in and sit down, go ahead and have a look at your computer.

If you see that you're starting to come up in the green then we'll set take profit rungs every $100 to $200, until you've sold 80% of your position. Let the remaining 20% ride in case it keeps going up. Now I set about 10 rungs to long and 10 rungs to take profit. We call a rung basically a buy order because they show up as buy lines or ladder rungs.

Now, we all have those days where we take our profits and then it keeps going up. During those times, you're probably really tempted to kick yourself for not staying in! That's okay. We all feel that way, and that's where the 80/20 rule comes into play. The key here is to leave 20% of your position behind to do 80% of the work.. Once you come in and see that you've got that three hundred dollars of profit to take, take out eighty percent of it. Keep a calculator handy at your desk, or use the internet to tell you exactly how much eighty percent of that profit would be. Take only that amount out, and leave in the last twenty percent. By doing this, you're ensuring that if the numbers keep climbing, you won't feel left out. You'll still have that twenty percent left in play to catch anything that might continue to go up. This also means that you have safely taken out a good portion and it will remain safe going forward. That's a huge risk that you've taken off of your shoulders, and it will make you more comfortable for this next step in the process.

By leaving twenty percent in to see what the market does you won't take too hard of a hit if the market tanks and end up kicking yourself even harder for it. It's important that you play it safe because that's the only way to ensure that you continue to turn a profit for a long, long time. And these slow gains, these are what people use to gain real wealth. This isn't a get rich quick scheme, though it can easily look that way when you watch a lot of videos out there. This is a "slow and steady wins the race" type of game, and when you are patient, you will win. Most millionaires are not made overnight. Most millionaires are made by the slow and methodical plodding that proves to the universe that they're here to play...but they're also here to stay. And you, my friend, are here to stay. So be patient with yourself. When you see a big gain on the screen, celebrate your win and then take out that profit. Use the other twenty percent to play with. Let's say you do this, and that last twenty percent makes its own three hundred dollars.

That's great! That's what you want to happen. In that case, take eighty percent of that new gain and set it aside for safe keeping. Now, leave another twenty percent in there. This way, you are only ever playing with that twenty percent. It is still a risk, and you can still lose that completely. But you know that you aren't playing with all of the eggs in your basket, and that peace of mind will give you the patience to play it safe even longer. This perseverance, the ability to be tenacious at your strategy instead of getting too excited after a long day of really great trading, is what will help you build wealth over the course of the year.

If you are taking profit, be very wary of a correction of price slamming back down just as fast as it ramped up. You don't want to create any new buy or long rungs at the top of the price, thinking that it's going to continue. Don't get tricked by the trap and be trapped yourself. No one knows how far the market will go, but you will know that you have your 20% in there that you can milk from. You need to take at least 24 hours off and let it cool down when the price comes down. You'll then need to calculate a new entry that is about 60% from where it started running up and reset your buys there.

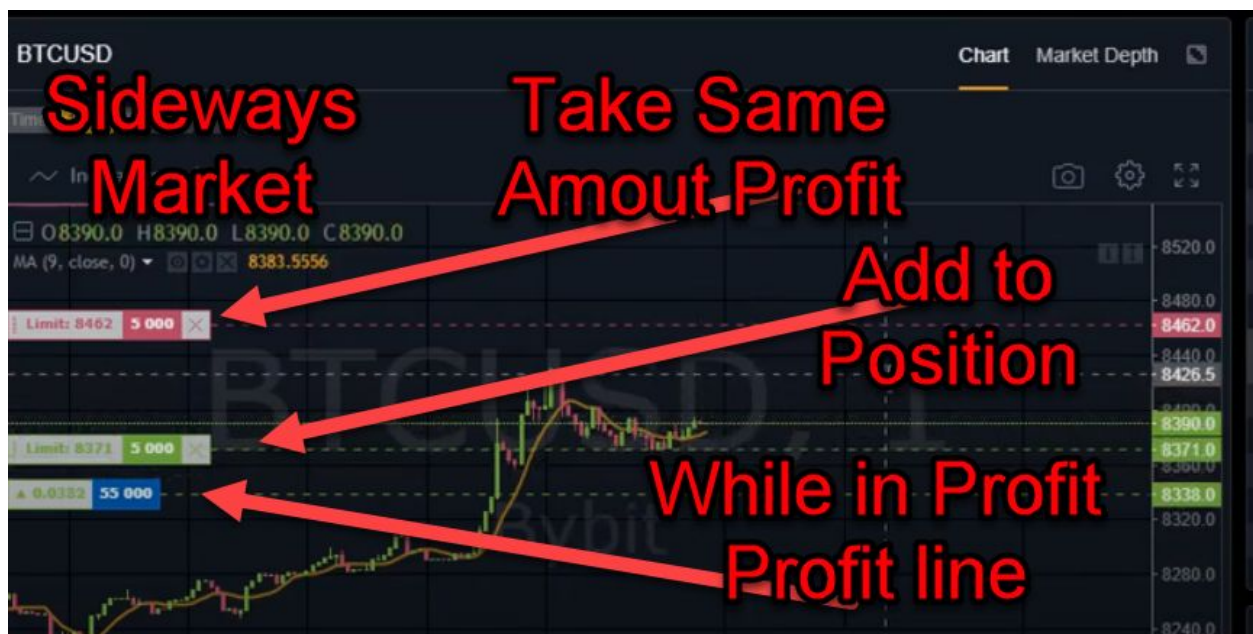

If the trend hits a pattern, and you see that it has been going up for a long period of time, it's probably time to call it because it may be likely to tank soon. Could you short it? I suppose you could. But I don't personally teach that way because I don't think that taking on that big of a risk is a smart idea. There is no way to tell how far it will go, or how fast it will rebound, so I usually stay out of those trades.

Now for that trap. There is only one way to close that order, and that is to profit. This is where you'll need to be strong and practice diligence. You don't want to look at your trade and become stressed if it's losing. Remember, if you're at 3X or 5X leverage, it has to drop by about two thousand dollars before you actually are liquidated. When you look at it, it is very unlikely that once it's run up that much for the year, and continues to run up, that it's going to come down that hard. It won't go down too much, but it would be very difficult for it to undo all of that force. So if you're looking at a bull, make sure you're always longing and for bears, make sure to always short.

Let's work with an example of a seven thousand dollar investment amount that you've gotten a two hundred dollar profit on. It is now sitting at $7200. Once you see that tie, which will come down just a little, you can buy a little bit more of it. The thinking is that it will come back up pretty quickly and you can sell it again. This is the "buy more, sell up" approach, and even though you're in the long position, you just add more positions, and sell as it goes up. The sizing on the contract is that you do lose smaller. So let's say I have ten thousand contracts, and it's gone up two hundred dollars. I might just buy five thousand and watch it come up, sell five thousand and watch it go down, and so on. So my total position size will be twenty five thousand, I sell, which will bring me back down to twenty thousand. I would then buy five thousand again, and return to twenty five thousand. By doing this, you can still profit from it even while it's going sideways. This way you're also not giving away your entire position.

This process will depend a lot on whether or not you are able to babysit it. If you can sit there for a while and keep your eye on it, such as times when you are just hanging out with your family or getting some other work done, that's a great time to use this wolf pack strategy. Set your trap, and watch over it to see what you catch.

When you see a period of slow price action, or price changes, it may be time to take that break we were talking about earlier. You might be losing fifty dollars or so and worrying over that loss, but you need to just wait it out. Try not to think about it too hard, and just remind yourself that you've got a long way to go before it reaches that two thousand dollar threshold where you need to start worrying over it. Just set your trap, go to bed, and don't give it too much thought. If you're the type of person that stresses over a fifty dollar loss, you're going to end up wearing yourself out too quickly. That exhaustion can lead to poor choices and long term mistakes.

Take your time with this, and it will reward you. Once you set your trap and head to bed, or do your chores and other responsibilities, take a deep breath. It will sell and do the same job it always does. You can watch the market over the long term and see that it always does the same thing. Find some comfort in this, and don't stress too much. Business is simple, but it's not easy. This means that the math is simple. Everything around us is math, and this is no different. If you know the math, then this entire process should be simple, yes? Unfortunately, that's where our individual natures come into play, and we are each equipped with different comfort levels for things like this.

Chapter 5. Conclusion

Keep it simple, and it will work for you. For those who would like more support during the learning process, you can become part of my private Discord group. You can access free video training of me doing everything on video. Register for the free course at <https://tradebotsecrets.com/tbsbook> In this course, you will learn the basics of trading along with evergreen strategies. In addition to the training group, we will be posting our profits for bragging rights. Remember every time you take profit, you have the ability to compound it because you can increase your trade amount a little bit more on the next entry. As soon as you take profit, share it in the group and we will all be there to hype you up!

Being part of a community like this is a really important part of this job, and as we know, a rising tide raises all ships. I want you to get in the habit of taking profit and shouting about it...every time. When this becomes more natural, you can work on things beyond the fundamentals and really refine your personal strategy. I'm here to guide you and encourage you during that process. Once you're in the habit of taking profit each day, you can mentor the newer members of the group and become a guiding force for them, as well. There will always be more new people in the pack who want to follow in your footsteps once you have mastered the fundamentals. This group will be a great place to ask each other questions, and see how things are working for everyone. You can create your own contests, and press each other on toward those first important milestones in your journey!

Being part of a group also helps keep your eyes on the prize. For example, if you're really excited to take profit, but you want to leave it all in because you're hoping for an even bigger gain--we've got you. We'll encourage you to go ahead and take that profit every time, because eight hundred dollars in your pocket is better than fantasizing over a larger amount that you could get. And remember, you always have that twenty percent in play at all times, so you can still have your fun without all that worry. That's what we'll be telling you all along the way. This makes it a lot easier to do the right thing for your wallet, and your future, because we are there to talk you down from "good trade euphoria" and not let you fall!

Join our discord group when you sign up for the free trading course <https://tradebotsecrets.com/tbsbook> . This is where you can find more one on one connection with me, and will receive the most benefit as far as honing your skills as a trader. In this group, you can watch me in real time as I stop what I'm doing, sit down at the computer, and make each decision. Understanding the why of each decision will help you gain confidence in your own trading skills, as well as help you to develop and nurture your own intuition for the process.

It's easy to read a book and listen to someone tell you how to do something. It's another thing entirely to practice those skills with an expert. I will show you my daily rankings in contests, and reveal my real take home numbers from that day's traders. This information and personal access is invaluable to newcomers, because seeing and understanding the process is a vital part of trading success. Once you've watched me work on my business, listened to me explain why I took profit in that moment, and watched as I actually do take an entire day off when I've closed out a great day...you'll be that much more likely to do it yourself. Being successful and profitable in this business is not difficult to do. It's just like anything else...a skillset that you must learn and practice. I did not become an engineer overnight, and neither will you become a millionaire overnight. But with my help, and a little dedication and patience on your part, you can certainly become one a lot faster than you'd think.

There's more trading secrets than what I can offer in this book. So I want you to continue this book with video training and reveal other trading secrets in my member's area. Head over to <https://tradebotsecrets.com/tbsbook> and we'll see you on the inside.
